The Edinburgh

Edinburgh Inventor Missing

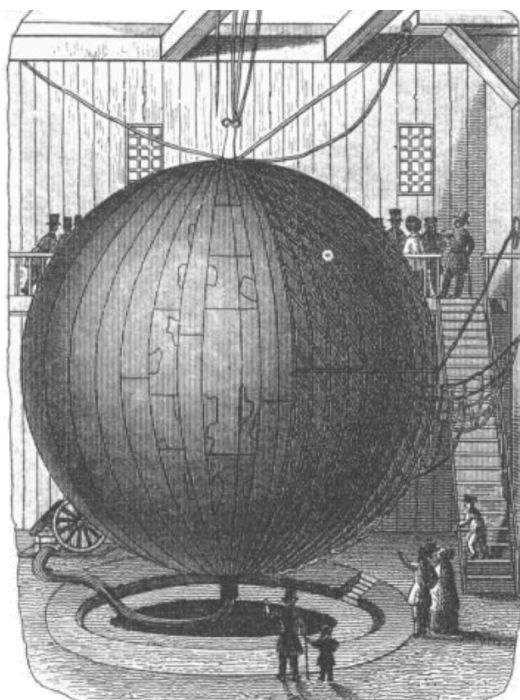

Noted Edinburgh resident and socialite Ulysses G. Houston remains missing. Dr. Houston was last seen some eight weeks ago – overhead Wellington, New Zealand. The celebrated inventor has been attempting to circumnavigate the globe without pause: a voyage that, if successful, would be the first of its kind. Dr. Houston set off from the Port of Leith on Boxing Day past. According to Scotland Yard, the doctor was expected to pass over Puerto Natales, Argentina, over a week ago, but the flying contraption in which he was travelling has yet to be sighted. According to Detective Inspector Hercule, attempts to locate Dr. Houston are complicated by the fact that the precise method of propulsion of his flying contraption known only to Dr. Houston himself, thus making any attempt to plot his path imprecise. 'It is possible that Dr. Houston will reappear closer to Santiago than Puerto Natales,' claimed Detective Inspector Hercule. 'Nothing like the machine built by Dr. Houston has existed before. My best scientists tell me that, according to our present understanding of physics, the blasted thing should not work at all, yet it is also true that the good doctor has travelled in it half way across the globe so I must conclude that they are all mistaken.' When asked if it was possible that Dr. Houston was still floating somewhere over the Pacific Ocean, the Detective Inspector said, 'I once met Ulysses G. Houston. With him, I would say that anything is possible.'

It is believed that Her Majesty Queen Victoria has despatched Royal emissaries to the Americas in order to expand the search for the noted inventor. The Doctor is said to be a close confidante of her Majesty. The pair are believed to have first met at 'The Worlds' Fair of 1862, which that year was held in London. It was at this fair that Dr. Houston first unveiled his now world-famous Barolometer, a device capable of predicting the weather with astonishing accuracy. The invention earned Dr. Houston the Royal Seal, and it is thought that Her Majesty has been a secret but significant investor in the doctors' work ever since.

'We don't need em' bristled Detective Inspector Hercule, when informed of the delegation of Royal Emissaries about to descend upon the sandy shores of Santiago and all up and down the Eastern coast. 'With all due respect to Her Majesty, we know our business better than someone who yesterday was eating crumpets and clotted cream. The Americas are a vast and peculiar land – perfectly servicable once you get accustomed to its ways, of course, but you need a good deal of local knowledge if you wish to get anything done. Those lads probably couldn't tell you a peso from a pound!'

This paper contacted Lady Eleanor De Chambery, a known associate of Ulysses G. Houston. The esteemed Lady seemed little concerned by the reports of his apparent disappearance. 'Of course I do not know where my dear Ulysses is at the present time, but it is hard to imagine that any device of his making might malfunction. Ulysses is a genius. It is more likely that my dear friend encountered something upon his travels that piqued his curiosity and that he has diverted himself. That would be just like the man. Miss Melina Croft, another of Dr. Houston's known associates, echoed the sentiments of Lady De Chambery. 'If something interesting found him, Ulysses would forget all about his grand voyage in an instant, strange as that may seem to you and me.' [continued on page 4...]

Strange Weather Continues

Following on from the unseasonal snowfall of the past four days, Edinburgh residents now find themselves in the midst of a record-breaking heat-wave. There have been reports of spontaneous thunderstorms affecting parts of the city. Oddly, the storms seem to fall only upon a single street at a time, before disappearing. 'I was out to collect the messages,' explained local resident Betty Hickson, an eye-witness to the strange goings-ons, 'when all a sudden it started to rain. Not a wee drizzle as would be civilised, but the sort of rain that drenches you through to your underbitches the minute you step in it. Fortunately, it only fell on the Balfour Street side o' the road, so alls I had to do to get out away from the lightning was to cross

It is hard to disagree with Mrs. Hickson. Most of the unusual weather has been focused in the Leith area of the city, with several locals connecting the unusual weather to missing inventor and noted Barologist Ulysses G. Houston. 'His house may be empty,' said Mrs. Daughtry of Elm Row. 'But I've seen strange lights and heard peculiar sounds coming out of that old house in the dead of night. Mark my words, there is something uncanny going on inside that house! People say Dr. Houston is dead. Codswallop, that is! I think maybe the Master of the house isn't lost at all, but perhaps he made it all the way back home quicker than anyone expected. Why he doesn't show himself is anyone's guess.'

me doggo — retreated back the way we had come. Not two steps did we take when it was morning again. Now I'm Sixty-Four years old. I've seen a lot in my day that you would'nae believe, but I ain't seen nothing like that before!

This reporter put Mr. Macleod's account to Sir Argyle, who replied, 'Balderdash! Crazy old Duncan has been seeing spooks in pyjamas for the past twenty years.' When this reporter put it to Sir Argyle that during the course of our short interview there had formed a total of SEVENTEEN rainbows overhead, the Councillor conceded it odd, but refused to... Spokesman for Edinburgh Council, Sir Grammer Argyle, said, 'We at the Council are aware of reports of unusual weather phenomena, but we believe them to be greatly exaggerated. Most of the 'phenomena' seem to occur in the wee hours of the night, and are witnessed by those who have had one dram too many to put it kindly. It is more likely that all the speculation regarding the mysterious disappearance of Ulysses G. Houston has created an environment ripe for imagination and foolish flights of fancy. Granted, all this unseasonable snowfall has been a little disconcerting...'

Duncan Macleod, of Morningside, disagrees. 'I was walking the doggo one morning when all of a sudden we turned a corner and it was pitch black. I looked up and sure enough there was the moon and stars and all. It was night-time! Naturally, both me and Gandalf — that's
